"The South 40"

Heavy rains in recent weeks have caused nitrogen and herbicide losses.

1. The ammonium form of nitrogen will not be lost due to leaching and denitrification in Appomattox County soils.

2. The nitrate form can be lost through leaching and denitrification. Leaching losses will be greatest on the light textured sandy loams and loamy sands. Denitrification will occur in water logged soils of any texture but is most likely to be a problem in heavy textured soils with slow percolation rates. It goes without saying that a flooded soil is a water logged soil.

Denitrification rates can be quite rapid if easily decomposable organic matter is present.

3. Conversion of ammonia to nitrate in soils is quite rapid at temperatures above 50°F. However, the rate of conversion decreases rapidly as the temperature drops below 50°.

4. Most of our corn is fertilized with the 30% UAN solutions. The nitrogen in this material is ¾ ammonium.

With this background how much nitrogen has been lost due to leaching and denitrification? My guess is that it ranges from less than 20% to 80% or more.

1. Situations where it may well be almost 100% would be:

A. Nitrogen applied at the time we had the relatively high temperatures about two or three weeks ago. By the time the rain came, most would have been in the nitrate form.

B. Rainfall during this last rainfall period was 3 inches or more.

2. Any soil condition in which the nitrogen was applied during the warm spell and was either water logged or flooded for 36 hours or more.

The situation where I think it would be less than 20%, would be:

1. A deep, well drained, heavy textured soil such as Davidson or Cecil.

2. Rainfall did not exceed 3 inches.

Evaluation will need to take into consideration:

1. Rainfall
2. Water logged conditions
3. Soil type

4. Time of N application and source which will help one estimate the distribution of the applied N between ammonia and nitrate forms.

I am sure there are a number of cases where Nitrogen losses have been significant. I am also sure there are a number of cases where losses have not been significant.

Plant tissue analysis would be a big help here. One can either add extra nitrogen based on his analysis of the situation or monitor Nitrogen levels in the crop as it develops. The first tissue sample would be a whole plant sample (above ground portion would have to be 6" - 8" high.) Full instructions on how to take tissue samples are available from this office.

Corn can be sidedressed at any time up until it is about knee high if nitrogen level drops below the sufficiency range. If the level is well within the sufficient range at the knee high stage there should be sufficient N for the crop the remainder of the year.

Now, in regards to herbicides, the very heavy rainfall has most likely had an adverse effect on all herbicides. Their movement from the surface will be dependent on their solubility and absorption characteristics. Their loss will be greater on grey soils than the red soils with higher clay content. Sheet erosion and soil deposition will also have effect.

Atrazine and simazine with relatively low water solubility and readily absorbed would be expected to move downward in the soil very little. These would be expected to still provide weed control, if sheet erosion or soil deposition has not occurred. Most likely they'll be less effective on sandier soils than on clay soils.

The most soluble herbicides such as Lasso, Bladex, Eradicane, Sutan or Dual will most likely move out of the soil surface and their effectiveness reduced. Each chemical has a different solubility and absorption characteristic; therefore, close observation is necessary.

Since herbicides are expected to be less effective. What can be done now? The amount of chemical loss can not be predicted so it's impossible to recommend additional herbicide applications. Post-emergence use of atrazine and oil may be a solution. Annual grasses must be less than ½" for this to be effective. This is usually not too effective on fall panicum. Shallow cultivation is still a good practice. Another alternative to consider is the use of Evik or Lorox as a post emergence directed application. There must be a differential in height of the weeds to the corn for this to work.

Observe all corn fields very closely and often and be ready to make a timely cultivaitor or post-emergence herbicide applicaiton.

Give a farmer a hand.

Late in June, a lot of lucky farmers will win a Fidelity American banker as a free farm hand for ten full hours. As prizes in Fidelity's "Give a Farmer a Hand" contest, the bankers will be doing anything you want...planting, feeding stock, milking, plowing, and learning a little more about farming.

But the main purpose of the contest is to call attention to one of the greatest assets in our country: the farmers. Any working farmer in the area can enter. Just stop by Fidelity American, fill out an entry blank, and deposit it in the special container in the lobby. A random drawing will be held this June. If you win, we supply you with a hand-working farm hand for a day – and you supply the hand with breakfast and lunch.

(By the way, our bankers want us to warn you that the harder you work them, the more they eat!)

Member FDIC

Meet a "Prize" Banker.
Buddy Eggleston is just one of the Fidelity American bankers who will be won by some lucky farmer. And if you fill out an entry form now, you might win Roy Bennett or Floyd Williams.

You may be one of the lucky farmers who will win a hand for a day...from Fidelity.
